Parents seek alternative for Back to School shopping

Rising food and gas prices are causing parents to rethink back to school shopping this year. More and more moms and dads are looking to resale outlets like Divine Consign (www.divineconsign.net) a local semi-annual consignment sale, to clothe their children for the upcoming school year.

Divine Consign offers children's and baby items at a fraction of the retail cost including clothing, toys, furniture and much more. Since 2001, Divine Consign has provided high-quality products to parents across the DFW Metroplex. Between all three locations, shoppers can expect approximately 100,000 items from at least 900 families.

Divine Consign shoppers can expect huge savings on the items they need for their children. The consignors themselves often walk away with all the clothes their kids will need for the next school year as well as some much-needed cash in their pocket.
